

DUMP YOUR SPOUSE IN LUXURY AT DIVORCE HOTEL!

Married guests check in, but leave divorced

Elegant rooms greet guests. The banner on this bed reads: "Look forward to tomorrow"

IF YOU'VE gotta get a divorce, why not make the break quick, clean and in the lap of luxury?

That's the thinking behind the Divorce Hotel. Through the Web site divorcehotel.com, folks can set up a weekend UN-hookup at one of six high-class resorts. There, the company provides a full line of services for a happy ending to an unhappy marriage.

"Divorces can cost a lot of money and a lot of time," says mastermind and founder Jim Halfens. "Here, it's done in three days. We have everything they need: lawyers, mediators, psychologists. They arrive on Friday and leave on Sunday with their divorce papers."

Jim Halfens

So far, all the hotels are located in the Netherlands. But he's already scouting sites in the U.S.

"The marriage failed but it's also a new start," says Halfens. "The best we can offer is a better solution than fighting for years."

HICCUPS – FOR 27 YEARS!

TALK about a major hiccup in life! A Tennessee man has been wracked with the annoying diaphragm spasms for the last 27 years — and they show no signs of stopping!

"I lay in bed at least an hour before I doze off, I wake in the morning — still there," says Bob Taylor, one of the rare people suffering from chronic hiccups that have no explanation.

There are a slew of unofficial cures, including eating peanut butter, holding your breath, breathing into a paper bag, standing on your head and drinking water, getting someone to scare you, drinking a spoonful of vinegar, swallowing repeatedly, downing a spoonful of mustard, sticking your fingers in your ears, sniffing smelling salts and making yourself vomit.

Enduring an unwelcome spasm every few seconds, the desperate Bristol man has tried them all — to no avail.

There are medications for people with chronic hiccups, but they make Taylor sick. "The Veterans Affairs hospital said they could operate on the nerve in my stomach," he says. "But they said it wasn't serious enough — to me it's serious."

Folks can end their marriages in style